

I really enjoyed the clinic at Rancho Santa Fe this year I feel as though it really gave me a confidence boost that I had been needing. We worked a lot on my hunches-in and turn on the haunches. Lendon's instructions on how to do the turn on the haunches made so much more sense then what I had heard before, she told me to do a small circle and as my horse was starting to turn to push her with my right leg to move her butt over. Once I understood that we were able to get a few steps.

Another thing that was great to here was that my lateral work was coming along great. I always feel as though Pies shoulders lead really bad in my leg yield, but Lendon told me no her hind end leads and that was a much easier fix than if her front end did. Lendon also made me aware of how much I move my hands when I ride she got out her trusty velcro gloves and I was so surprised at how much more restricted I felt. I had been struggling with my shoulders-ins for quite a while now turns out I just had my hands in the wrong position and once those gloves were on I didn't have a problem at all. All in all I'd call the clinic a success.
